GENERAL BUTLER'S DEATH.

IT RESULTED EARLY YESTERDAY MORNING FROM PNEUMONIA.

HE WAS AT HIS WASHINGTON HOME AND HAD ATTENDED COURT DURING THE DAY.

[BY TELEGRAPH TO THE TRIBUNE ] Washington, Jan. 11.-General Benjamin Franklin puter died of heart disease early this morning home of his niece, on Capitol Hill in this His death was startlingly sudden, and the anent of it in a rewspaper extra this morning was the arst news to the public that General Lutler was even a visitor in Washington. He had started from Lowell on Friday evening last for New-York, making the trip, in spite of the rough weather, on the sent in New-York, where he attended to some legal and on Sunday the General decided to come to this city for a few days, intending to make ar orements for spending the winter here.

Monday he attended to some law cases before the eme Court and elsewhere, and in the intense yesterday afternoon he made a visit to the Wa ment, where he had a long talk with Secretary Enins. He had felt in such good health and spirits ing the Department building that he refuse wot for an elevator and insisted on walking up two fights of stairs to the Secretary's room. On coming down sgain, just about dark, he forgot, apparently, that he had left his carriage under the sheltered archmain entrance facing Pennsylvania-ave. Here he stood for ten minutes or longer in the face of the bitter northwest wind, while an attendant went round on the east side to hunt for his carriage. This serere exposure, it is thought, may have brought on the attack of hemorrhage and heart failure which carried him off in a few minutes between 12 and 1 o'clock this morning.

Though in recent years a somewhat less familiar figure in Washington than in earlier times, General was still almost as well known here as any man in public life. Though out of politics he was ere constantly on law business, and he still retained and managed personally much of the property which he had acquired during his long residence the capital. The house in which he died was his own, though occupied by Mrs. Lanier Dunn, one of It was only a year or two ago that he succeeded in selling to the Government the big grantte house which he built at an enormous cost on the uthern edge of the Capitol Grounds soon after the war. It was in this house that Vice-President Arthur red for a while in the early part of the Garfield Administration, and many other prominent public men have been guests in it. It is now owned by the Gov ernment and used as a sort of nunex to the Capitol

General Butler will be buried in his family lot at Lowell, Mass., where his wife and son Benjamin are buried. The date of burial will be determined after the arrival of his children. Lowell, Mass., Jan. 11.-Upon receiving news of General Butler's death this morning, Mayor Peck man ordered all flags on public buildings to be placed at half-mast, and called a special meeting of both oranches of the City Council for to-morrow evening to take formal action upon the decease of their distinguished fellow-citizen. Paul Butler left for Wast ingion early this morning, and the arrangements for will be made after his arrival there. Before leaving Mr. Butler requested Colonel C. A. R. Dimon to take charge of the public exercises. The funeral will probably be held in St. Anne's Episcopal Church on Saiurday afternoon. Up to his last moment in Lowell General Butler was very active. One day last week he left for Salem early in the morning to attend a will case trial. He returned to Lowell at noon, attended a funeral and was then driven to the station and left on the truin for New-York and Wash-

In a speech in Lowell, January 29, 1890, General Butler said : other side of the river, which I hope for as my last resting place, I pray you put over me for my epitaph: 'Here lies the general who saved the lives of his soldiers at Big Bethel and Fort Fisher, and who never commanded the Army of the Potomac. I ask for nothing else."

General Butler's wealth is estimated at $7,000,000. He owned half a million dollars' worth of real estate in Washington and as muca more in Lowell. He was interested in manufacturing at various points, and had a large share in the American Bunting Company, of Lowell. Among his Western investments were the Craig ranch of 100,000 acres in Colorado, three fourths of the Mora grant of 600,000 acres in New-Mexico and his large holdings in the San Miguel Consolidated Gold Placer Mining Company, of which he

Benjamin Franklin Butler was born in Deerfield, on November 5, 1s1s. He was the son of Captain John Butler, who served under General Andrew Jackson at New-Orleans. He was graduated at Waterville College (now Colby University), Maine, in 1838, and in 1840 he was admitted to the bar. He catered upon the practice of his profession at Lowell, Mass., in 1841. He early took an active part in politics, and in 1853 he was elected to the Massachusetts House of Representatives. In 1859 he became member of the Massachusetts Senate, and in the same year he was the Democratic candidate for Governor but was defeated by General Banks. In 1860 he was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention that met at Charleston, S. C. The story of that turbulent convention cannot be told fully here. General Eutler occupied an attitude peculiar to himself. Of the two minority reports the second one was his, and consisted of the platform of 1856 without a change. After a long debate his platform was relected and the minority report of Mr. samuels, of lows, was adopted. In that convention he voted repeatedly for Jefferson Davis. When the convention seembled, two months later, in Baltimore, General Butler, after taking part in the opening debates, anbounced that a majority of the Massachuseuts delegates would no longer participate in the proceedings, nuch as there had been a withdrawal of a majority of the States, and for himself he declared that he could not sit in a convention in which "the African slave trade, which is piracy by the laws of my county, is In the same year he approvingly advocated." unsuccessful Ereckinridge candidate for the Governorship of Massachusetts. When President Lincoln made his call for troops in April, 1861, General Butler was a brigadler general in the Massachusetts Militia. He was at once given command of the District of Annapolis, which ded Baltimore, and marched there with the 8th Massachusetts Regiment. On May 13, 1861, he red Baltimore with 900 men without opposition, and days later he was made a major-general and given the command of Fort Monroe and the Depart ment of Eastern Virginia. When he was in Balti more some slaves came within the lines. Their rewas demanded by their masters, but Genera ler refused to deliver them up, on the ground that they were "contraband of war," an expression which quickly became proverbial. In August, 1861. He adopted strong and summary measures for the good order and health of News, and in consequence incurred a hatred on the part of the hot-headed Southerners that followed him nighout his life. A general order designed to women from insulting soldiers was followed heavy censure from all directions. The execu-of William Mumford for pulling down the United tes flag from the Mint was also regarded by many as a deed of peodless severity. His sanitary regula-tions, however, were indisputably beneficial, however the enforcement of them may have been; and his compulsion of the rich Secessionists to contribute to the relief of their poorer brethren was a measure which was at least practical. The hatred of the South at this juncture was manifested in a proclamation of Jefferson Davis declaring him an outlaw. Itis seizure of $800,000 in the office of the Dutch Consal on the ground that it was intended for rebel was the cause of a protest from the foreign consuls, and the Government at Washington ordered the return of the money. In December, 1862, General Butler was recalled from New-Orleans, at the instigation, as he always declared, of Louis Napoleon, who was then busy with his luckless Mexican schemes. Late in 1863, however, he was put in command of the Department of Virginia and North Carolina, his force being known as the Army of the James. In the following year, after a brief visit to New-York, whither he went to quell impending rlots, he made an ineffectual attempt against Fort Fisher, and soon afterward was relieved of his command, on the ground of incompetency, by General Fall River steamboat line. All day Saturday he Grant. General Lutler then returned to his home in Massachusetts.

In 1866 General Butler was elected to Congress as a Republican, and he continued to hold his sent until 1879, with the exception of the term for 1875-77. In 1868 he took a prominent part in the proceedings looking to the impeachment of President Johnson, being the most active of the managers appointed by the House. Three years later he was once more an unsuccessful conditate for Governor. Then he changed his politics, and accented the arm. once more an unsuccessful candidate for Governor. Then he changed his politics, and accepted the support of the Greenback party in 1878 and 1879, only to meet with popular rejection twice more. In 1882 he was the candidate of the united Democrats and His administration is chiefly remembered for his vigorous assault upon the management of the Tewksbury Almshouse, which was not sustained by the Committee of Investigation appointed by the Legislature. In 1883 he tried for the Governorship again, but was defeated. In 1884 he was the of years he was a member of the General Committee, an Greebback candidate for Fresident. The campaiga of that year closed General Entler's political career, and since then he had devoted his time to his law practice, his great industrial interests and to the writing of his biography. General Butler was an audactous politician, an astate lawyer and a charming conversationalist. His name will long be mentioned in connection with some of the most noted criminal and civil cases of his time. As a Congressman he was active and influential, both on the floor and in the committee rooms. In recent years General Butler was counsel in many cases of importance before the Supreme Court. While he did not build speedy boats and race them, General Butler figured prominently in yachting affairs and was devoted to the sport. He bought from the Government, soon after the war, the famous schooner yacht America. On this celebrated yacht the General was accustomed to spend much of his time in the summer months. Before he became convinced that the yacht had been outchesed he entered her in many races. Of late years, however, he saw the march of events and the America has been an onlooker but not a participant at all the big regattas each year. Once or twice he made a cruise to the Maritime Provinces of Canada and to the Coast of Labrader in the America. He always kept the old yacht up in "ship shape and Bristol fashion," and was deeply attached to her. He gave his son Paul a half interest in the beat and the ook the same interest in the yacht and in the sport as his father

General Butler had a law office in this city on the sixth floor of the Mutani Life Insurance Building. No. 32 Nassaust., the suite being shared by James P. Lowrey. The General had had headquarters in the building since 1884. Previous to that time he transacted all his business while in this city at the Fifth Avenu-Hotel, where he always occupied the same apartment, It was on the ground floor on the Twenty-third-st side. In those days he nearly always arrived in the city on Saturday and remained a day or two. would make his appointments in advance and thus would make the most of the time he spent here. In the last seven or eight years. General Butler had seldom slept in this city. He would arrive in the morning from Boston or Washington and go to the Lawyers' club for breakfast. His lancheon was a sandwich. At his office he would see the men with the advance when he would be at his office. Late in the afternoon or evening he would continue on his way to Washington or return to Boston. He had his consultations with most of his clients from the North-late of Boston. His last visit here was on The steamer was delayed and did not reach her pier until nearly 2 p. m. He spent less than an hour in his office and then took the "Congressional for Washington. He expected to be back here the latter part of this week.

The General did not appear in court here frequently. About a year ago he argued briefly before Judge Wallace as attorney for the Irish relatives of A. T. Stewart who were seeking to get a share of his estate. About twelve years ago he appeared in his own behalf in the trial of an action brought against him for damages for alleged false im prisonment and wanton destruction of property in the The opposing counsel pictured him as a most brutal man, and tears were seen to flow down the clerk of the court, spoke to him and he replied: "Yes, am not so hardened and collons that I am not affected by such abuse" But he displayed no animosity in the case, which he won. Mr. Lowrey says that the General never wors speciacles until two years ago. He had a poir made at that time, but did not always wear them while reading. He always held the paper or book he was reading close to his eyes.

Some years ago General Butler presented the New-York Ear Association with a copy of an admirably painted portrait of Rufus Choate, which hangs in me of the Judges' rooms in the Court House at ton. The room was a favorite lounging place of the General's, and there he was met one day two years ago by a visitor from New-York, to whom he related the story of the picture. "You must known Mr. Choate, General," said the latter. me, is it a good portrait?" "Yes," replied General Eutler, glanding obliquely at the canvas on the wall, it looks like Choate, who looked all jaundice and invistradence "

General Butler's wife was a daughter of Dr. Israel Hildreth, of Lowell, Mass. She was on the stage from 1837 to 1842, when she married General Entler. Hildreth. She dled in 1876. Their daughter married ex-Governor Adelbert Ames, of Mississippi. One son, Ben amin, an army officer, died in 1871. One son, Paul, survives him.

THE ELEVATOR TRUST-A CORRECTION. ro the Editor of The Tribune. Sir: Your issue of January 6, under the heading

A Passenger Elevator Trust," states that the Sprague Electric Company is a member of a trust existing among the passenger elevator manufacturers of this ountry. I beg to state that this report is absolutely untrue. The Sprague Electric Flevator Company is distinctly opposed to, and is not in any way connected with, the elevator combination existing between the Crane, Otis, Hale and Whittier companies. Fairness demands the same publicity to this denial which yo have given to the original report. ave given to the original report.

MR. BLAINE COMFORTABLE.

HIS CONDITION UNCHANGED.

NO BULLETIN TO BE ISSUED, AS THE DOCTORS

THINK IT UNNECESSARY. Washington, Jan. 11 .- Dr. Johnston paid his good eight visit to Mr. Blaine just before 10 o'clock. He emained with his patient about a quarter of an our, and on leaving the house said to a reporter that Mr. Blaine had passed an "uneventful day" and was "resting easily to-night." Dr. Johnston's confidence in his condition is shown by the fact that count, in particular, stated to have come from an inimate friend of the Blaine family, was to the effect that a peculiar malady of the stomach was the cause of Mr. Blaine's filmess. Dr. Johnston said Mr. Blaine's tomach was now the strongest organ in his body. His dig stion was good and throughout his illness there had been no vomiting on the part of the patient. "Of course," added Dr. Johnston, "Mr. Blaine, like may other sick man, cannot digest solids such as beef-steak."

— "Do you care to make any farther statement in regard to Mr. Blaine's trouble!" was asked.
— "I do not," was the reply.
— "There is no great secrecy about it. I do not think it proper, however, that the doors of the Blaine household should be thrown open to the public and its privacy disturbed."

TRIAL OF A NEW KIND OF STREET CAR. The first public trial of a street-car provided with the battery was made yesterday afternoon on th tracks of the Ninth Avenue Street Railway Company ar started at Fifty-fourth-st, and went to One-hun and twenty lithest, and back to the car storehouses in Pitty-fourth-st. Between One-hundred-and sixt enth-st. and me-hundred-and-twenty-fifth-st, there is a steep hill, with the car over the incline required an average force of thirty-seven horse-power. The storage batteries, of which there are 113, supplied the requisite electrical current

Patrick Kennedy and Chories J. Diss, the inventors of the bottery system, and W. M. McDougall, the inventor of the motor, expressed themselves as being well pleased with yesterday's experiment. They said that the ear will te able to travel at the rate of twenty niles an hour; that the capacity of the discharge of the Acme battery was practically unlimited, and that the equipment of a road with the new system would be much chepper than with the trolley system. They also said that the supporting plates in the batteries were non-metallic, non-conducting was "resting easily to-night." Dr. Johnston's confidence in his condition is shown by the fact that he will not visit him again to-night.

Drs. Hyatt and Johnston made their afternoon visit to Mr. Blaine, the former arriving at 2:30 o'clock and the latter a few minutes later. They came out together in about half an hour. Dr. Johnston stated to the reporter that Mr. Blaine had had a comfortable morning, and that his condition was about the same as yesterday.

"No letter, Doctor?" was the query.

"His condition was quite comfortable yesterday," was the reply.

Dr. Johnston made his first call of the day shortly after 11 o'clock, and remained half an hour. On leaving he stated that Mr. Blaine had passed a comfortable night and was very comfortable, and appeared to be stronger than he was yesterday. The physicians would not issue another bulletin, as it was not considered to be necessary.

Mrs. Eugene Hale called about 5 o'clock and remained about an hour or so. When she came out her answer to an inquiry as to Mr. Blaine's health was reassuring. "Mr. Blaine is resting very comfortably indeed, this evening," she said.

The men with the street plane are apparently a potent factor in Mr. Flaine's struggle for life, for they were at their post again this evening, and after the value of the house and rewarded them.

The attention of Dr. Johnston was called to-day to several disgatches which hur lisine is suffering. One account, in particular, stated to have come from an infinite friend of the Blaine family, was to the effect institution he always exhibited the utmost prudence and fidelity.

Of pure New-England lineage, Mr. Low was a devoted friend of public education, and was for many years the President of the far-famed Packer Institute for the education of stris. He was a faithful and liferal supporter of the church to which he belonged, and a friend and companion of its successive Partner. He was a benevolent man, munificent in his contributions for the maintenance of organized charities, and gave liberally for the relief of other worthy objects of private beneficenest type. The social influences which surrounded him through his life imbused him with tastes and habits which were repurant to ostentatious and extravagant living and most conformable to 8the character of a genuine American clitten of amplitude that are true, honest, just, pure, lovely and of good revort.

Such an example may not be pergetuated in political annals, but it will serve to golde surviving associates and to inspire the hope that its influence will be felt in future centrations.

On motion of Mr. Pierrepont it was resolved unantmously that the foregoing tribute to the memory of Mr.
Low be inscribed on the minutes, and that the Secretary transmit a copy thereof to the family of the decased and cause the same to be published in New-York and Brooklyn.
